Abstract

The total memory market has witnessed a record 32 percent decline in Q4 2008, while Q1 2009 saw another 11 percent drop which has caused considerable alarm in the technology industry. However, due to slowly improved conditions, Databeans predicts that the next several quarters will bring a return to growth in the memory market.

Databeans predicts that Q2 2009 will mark the beginning of renewed profits with an increase of 6 percent up to $8 billion from $7.6 billion in Q1 2009. This trend will continue over the following five quarters, growing to $12.5 billion by the third quarter of 2010. This is predicted to occur thanks to an improvement in consumer spending, especially in the computer segment as buyers begin to replace older PC models with those containing the new Microsoft Windows 7 operating system.

This study is available through individual report purchase for $1,500.00 USD, or available at a discounted rate through our Databeans Complete Library and the Memory Service.
